

I strongly oppose any relaxation of the FCC's ownership rules. To follow through with this suggestion would greatly harm the public. The media conglomerates already have too much control over what the public hears, and censors news widely. For example, although this overhaul is an unprecedented change, the major networks are completely ignoring the story, because they do not want the public informed until it is too late. As there is no balance of power, as the companies in control are already too big, there is utter silence on this issue. One look at what Clear Channel has done to the radio media, and you will fully understand the horror which would result from this reexamination. No relaxation must be permitted!
